

Denise Cooper-Clarke is a graduate of medicine and theology with a Ph. D in medical ethics (end of life decision making). She is a voluntary writer and editor with Ethos Centre for Christianity and Society and a member of the Social Responsibilities Committee of the Anglican Diocese of Melbourne. She has particular interests in virtue ethics and professional ethics.

Denise is a member of St. Thomas' Burwood where she has the voluntary role of Small Groups Coordinator and is involved in music ministry, worship leading and occasional preaching. She and her husband David have three adult children and seven grandchildren.